

LIBRARY

THOUGHT PROVOKING

The Design process began in December. I was feeling an edgy baroque romantic vibe. Dark and monochromatic, sculptural furniture pieces that if not for the artwork would blend into the sultry smoky walls. All of this was falling into place until the world took a turn into where we are today - then so did my vision for this room.

As a child, I remember sneaking into the men's only lounge to look for my father at the Standard Country Club in Atlanta GA. I would see the smoke, drinks, and card playing. The conversations were only understood by businessmen and they seemed distant and important. Women were not welcome. This was my first memory of the N word. I didn't fully understand but I knew it felt wrong. I was 5 at the time.

I wanted to express the Library as a room of diversity. My vision has remained the same but has taken on an unexpected direction of interpretation and individual discovery. The pallet is dark, mesmerizing, and thought provoking. My wish is to create a judgment free space to discover beauty and truth in oneself. I have had the privilege to be inspired for this project by Jill Ricci of Parlor Gallery, Gavin Benjamin, Franko Lacosta, Jennifer Gennari, Janell Designs and many others...thank you for being my friends and supporting me on this journey. Never to forget the human sacrifices that will ever change this world to be a better place

LADIES OFFICE

For our "Ladies Office" we envisioned a room that translates to an escape both in mind, body and spirit. A place where creativity can flourish, the mind can rest with nature, and form and focus can organically coexist.

You probably don't even know that you need a

GENERAL DESIGNER™

We all know what a general contractor does, but if you're remodeling or reinventing space, you probably need a General Designer. A GD is more than just someone who can make your home beautiful – it's someone who understands all of your needs and holds the vision for your entire project. Someone who does an in depth discovery to understand your vision and your budget and then brings together and collaborates with everyone from the architect, to your family members to give you a thorough, thoughtful plan. A GD will assist you in making educated design decisions from the very beginning to the very end.
